3) Review and Acceptance of the May Meeting Minutes

Can we start numbering the pages of the minutes? Minutes Accepted. Suzette arrived and chaired the rest of the meeting.

4) Recovery Park, Gary Wozniak

Kathryn introduced Gary Wozniak. The city is ready to move finally on lease of land of the project. This is the largest food related project that will be going through the city, and Kathryn wants as many people in the community to hear about the project as possible before the official hearings.

Gary Wozniak presented. Recovery Park originated with Storehouse of Hope Substance Abuse Recovery Program. Benefits to Detroit include repurpose underutilized assets

The project has financial support from 7 philanthropic organizations, discussions with major investors, LOC approved w Detroit Development Fund, Preferred equity investment with 6 technical advisors, preferred equity with 3 technical advisors. Project leaders have held 13 community engagement meetings, done door to door surveys, and led engagement projects and research by multiple partners.

Today they are selling to 12 Detroit restaurants, harvesting 40 products. Their current location is bounded by Forest, I-94, St. Aubin, and Chene, this is the middle east central district or Poletown/Germantown. Area selected by larger group of people because it had high vacancy with land in municipal inventory, access to transportation, active infrastructure.

4 phases: Phase 1 will start in fall or next spring near Chene Ferry market, all storm drains are being closed off and storm water is being diverted by swales. They are looking at how much water will go back into ground water, how much water they can harvest for irrigation. Pilot farm at 2600 E. Grand includes a high tunnel run by Michelle Lutz. The pilot project didn't sell a high volume, but they grew a large variety of products. The products are chef centered, and delivered within 4 hours of harvest to area restaurants. They built a 1 acre heated facility in Waterford and expanded to 12 restaurants and have about 24 restaurants on waiting list. www.recoverypark.org and www.recoveryparkfarms.com. NextEnergy is the corporate sponsor for lighting solutions for indoor growing. They are currently in the process of site selection and facilities schedule. The goal is to scale up to provide accessible prices for produce. Long term goal is to build companies that will transition into ownership by the employees.

Q: How many jobs have been created?

8 so far, 5 are high skilled technical jobs, and 3 entry level. Plan to have 35 employees by the end of the year

Q: How long will it take for the operation to be self-sustaining?

A: business model is based on a 5 year time horizon. Now moving into borrowing, based on 3 acres running by end of next year the project will be in black by month 35. Year 2 pay for greenhouses without borrowing.

Q: What is wage scale?

A: employees start at $10, and receive benefits and supportive services to allow them to improve their skills and incubate businesses. By ear 3 average worker will make $12-15 per hour. Detroit does not have trained hydroponic workforce so training is a challenge.

Q: What organizations will you partner with for workforce development?

A: DWEJ, Jewish Vocational Services, Greening of Detroit, Matrix and Team Mental Health to name a few.

Discussion: the training and support services are so important. Gary gave his contact information and asked council members to can contact him if they have ways to assist with training or other aspects of the project.

313-737-3710 Gary Cell

Q: How can DFPC support? Our strategic plan includes developing land sale strategy, give us some of your time to help us develop policy.

There have been a lot of challenges working with the city and the current mayor. Gary needs people to support the project by attending community meetings and city hearings, and giving constructive criticism.

How do you plan to secure and allocate water?

At first water will come out of the tap, and the project is exploring where they can harvest water without using tap. They also have to figure out what happens to the water that is leaving the pipe, which is what Great Lakes Restoration Project is looking at.

Kathrny will also help to keep us informed of how the project is going.

5) Notes from the Field – Farm to School, Marisol Teachworth

The James and Grace Lee Boggs School has a farming and food component to the vision for the school. They want to include food in the school curriculum. They currently have a garden with a hoophouse and six raised beds that they were able to build with support from the W.K. Kellogg Foundation and Detroit Public Schools. The school food program serves three meals a day, and there are a lot of vegans and vegetarians who attend the school. Parents and teachers are thinking about how to offer healthy options for all the students. The school has a farm to school program in which they partner with farms in the city: D-Town Farm, Burnside Farm, Freedom Freedom, and EarthWorks. Parents do cooking demonstrations. Students also visit the farms, taste food from the gardens, and learn where food comes from.

As the school grows they want to think of school food and how to cook food on site, potentially partner with other food vendors, and start a youth farm stand. They have a three wheeled bike that they use to deliver extra food to families in the community. The School currently has grades K-5, and they plan to grow to grades K-12 plus grades 13-14.

Discussion: How strong is the parent group? The parents are supportive and committed. They developed a school food vision, and are committed to doing things differently. The Boggs School could reach out to the Organic Consumer Association because they are a strong advocate for non-gmo. Council members feel that the activities of the Boggs School are having a big impact across the community. Kathryn offered to share resources from Slow Foods, which has a School Garden Curriculum. The school could provide an opportunity to teach agriculture skills at the high school level.
